frequency word. Therefore, it is essential to teach the students the synonym of the word used in academic texts. Teachers also need to demonstrate how words are used in an academic context. It should pay attention not only to the high-frequency words but also to low-frequency words.

At the same time, students need to have sufficient recognition of academic vocabulary to enable them to write and comprehend an academic text. Understanding the nature of vocabulary acquisition as well as the use of vocabulary in an appropriate context will enable the researcher to develop a new academic vocabulary in a specific English education that involves a massive number of academic texts, such as research articles, theses, and academic textbooks.

Since the samples are limited to a greater extent, the conclusion could not be generalized to all contexts of learners and as such, this could account for the limitation of the study. The software used in this study can detect all of the kinds of words, like the punctuations, the wrong spelling words, and symbols. Therefore the total of 2.2 million running words of this corpus still consists of such a word list. Secondly, this study involves undergraduate theses from 10 universities. The present study would not guarantee whether the students' theses commit plagiarism or not.

The Captures of Data Collection Procedures

1. Collecting undergraduate theses soft file from E-library

2. The undergraduate theses in each university were combined in one in microsoft word form

3. LancsBox Software is opened
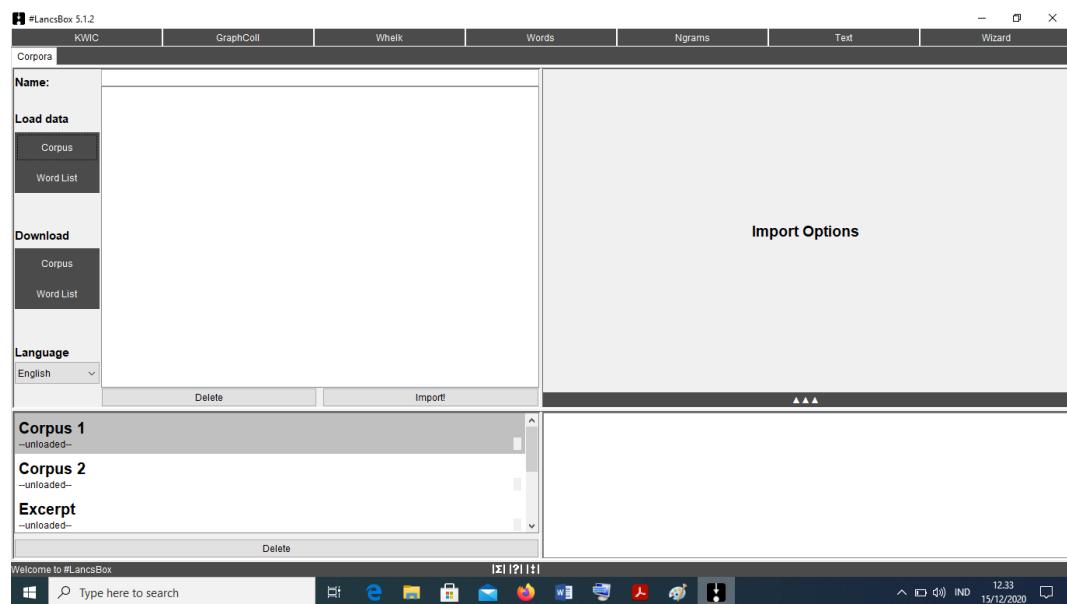

4. The files were loaded in the software
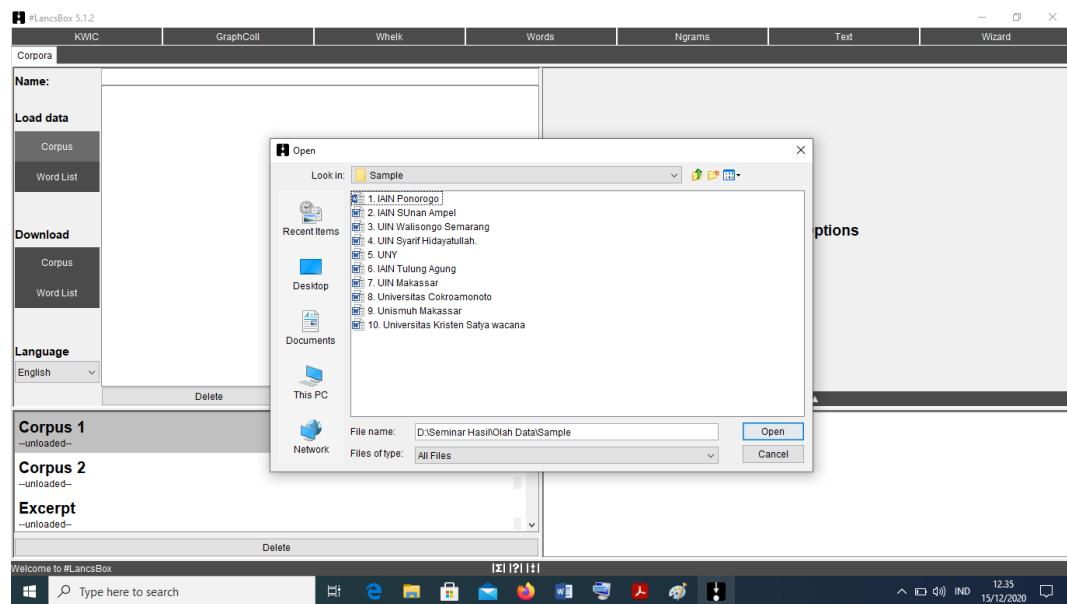

5. The files in the software called corpus were imported
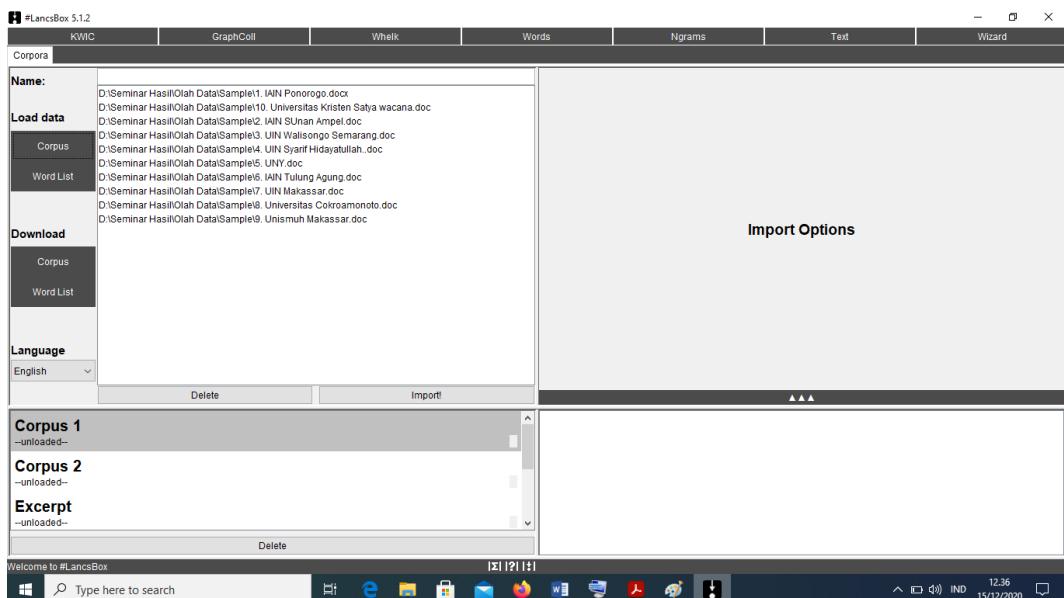

6. The files in the software called corpus were imported
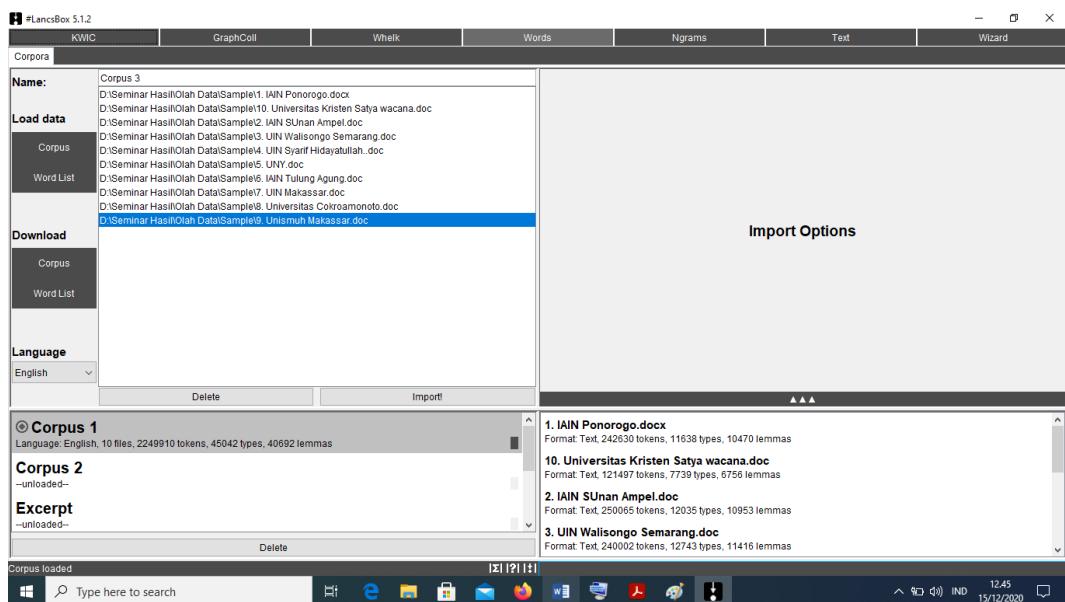

7. The tool of "word" in LancsBox is opened
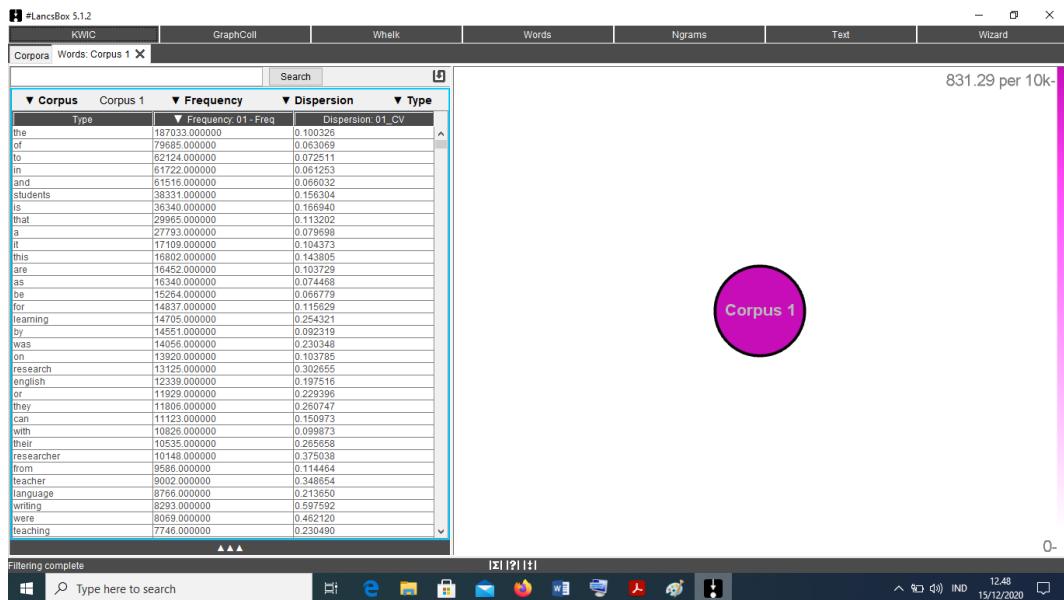

8. To acumulate the need in this study, the tool of "type" was changed to be "lemma"
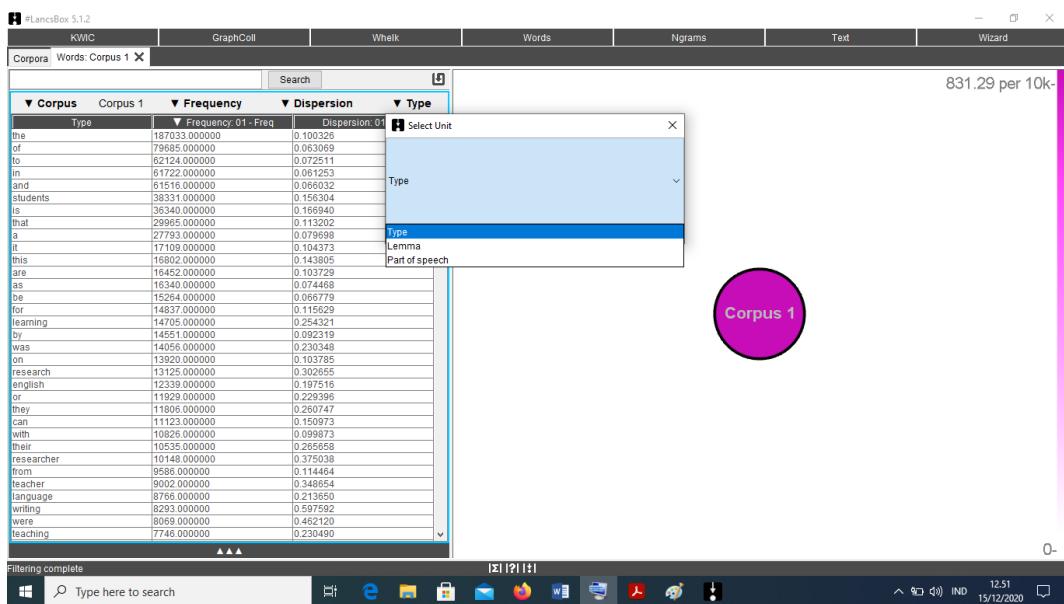

9. The tool of dispersion also was set to be "range"
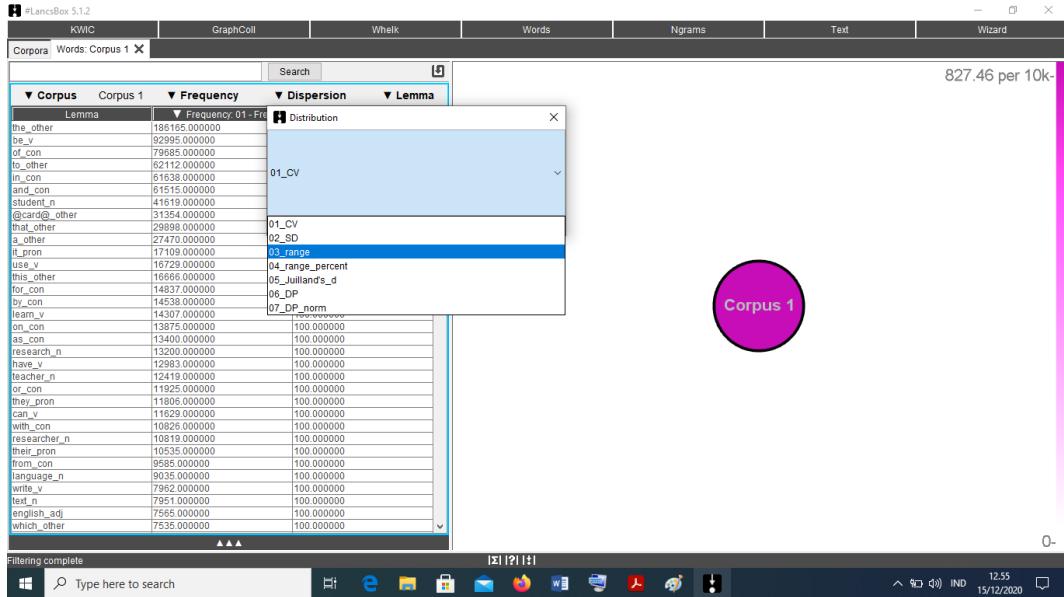

10. The result called word list was copied into Ms. Excel to analyzed based on Coxhead's word selection criteria
